

special collections DOUGLAS Library

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY AT KINGSTON Presented by

kingston ontario canada

A D D R E S S

TO THE

PEOPLE OF ENGLAND:

BEING THE

PROTEST OF A PRIVATE PERSON

Against every Suspension of Law that is liable to injure or endanger PERSONAL SECURITY.

WHEREIN IS SHEWN

That the Claim of personal Protection and Relief from unjust Imprisonment, "BY DUE PROCESS OF THE "LAW," (and that "WITHOUT DELAY,") is a "COMMON RIGHT," so indispensably due to all innocent Persons, that it cannot be set aside, or withdrawn from any that are so, (who demand it,) without fundamentally subverting the political Constitution, or legal Establishment of these Kingdoms, and thereby rendering the Advisers and Promoters of such a Measure guilty of High-Treason!

L O N D O N: PRINTED IN THE YEAR

M.DCC.LXXVIII.

[&]quot;It is the Duty of every Individual what sever to aid Peace and "Public Justice," — agreeable to a Maxim of the Law—
"Unusquisque paol et justitiæ publicæ tenetur
"succurrere."

[&]quot;These Men, who set aside" (or suspend) "the Law of the Land, do "thereby incur a perpetual Stain of Insamy!" — For it is a sundamental Maxim of the Constitution — "Legem Terre amit"tents perpetuam insamice notam inde merito incurrent."

AC911.1778.556

TO THE

PEOPLE OF ENGLAND.

→OMMON CHARITY will induce us to believe that the advocates for an occasional suspension of the Habeas Corpus laws are not really aware of the dangerous tendency of such a measure; and therefore when the author of this Protest (in the following pages) charges the advisers and promoters of the suspension with " bigh-treason against the " king and state," he professes to aim the severity of his censure chiefly against the measure itself, (in order to express the real danger and malignity of its effect,) rather than against the persons of those men who, inadvertently, or through inattention to the fundamental or indifpensable principles of law, have promoted A 2 it:

it: and therefore to those persons, jointly with all the other People of England, (as being equally interested with the rest in the effects of such a measure) the author of this Protest now addresses himself, not to promote a spirit of vengeance and personal resentment, but merely for the purposes of warning and instruction to all parties, that they may cordially unite in restoring the due limitations of government, on which depends the common safety both of king and people.

The Advocates for an occasional fufpension of the law, perhaps, will alledge, that the new temporary powers (whatever they may happen to be) which would thereby be thrown into the hands of the persons intrusted with the administration of government, are by no means intended to take effect against the People of England, that are resient in this island, but only against such persons as have been guilty of treason in foreign parts (in America, let us suppose, for instance) or on the high feas, or for piracy; and therefore they conceive, that the free inhabitants of this island could not be injured by so limited a suspension of the laws, especially if they should admit in their bill an additional clause of limitation, proposed even by an opposite party, by way of fecurity; which we will suppose to be couched in the following terms, viz. " That nothing herein is " intended, or shall be construed, to extend " to the case of any other prisoner or pri-" foners than fuch as shall have BEEN " OUT OF THE REALM AT THE TIME " OR TIMES OF THE OFFENCE OR " offences wherewith he or they shall 66 be charged, or of which they shall be " fuspected." Such a clause as this feems, on a flight examination, to fecure the inhabitants of this island from the danger of an unlimited power, against which which all true Englishmen ought to be ever upon their guard: but, alas! fo dangerous is it to stop the ordinary course of justice and common right, or to alter the " due process of the law," in any cafes whatsoever wherein personal liberty (the highest and most valuable temporal object of Englishmen) is concerned, that, if we should suppose the case of fuch a fulpension of the laws as courtiers in general would endeavour to obtain, were they to be intrusted with the compiling of a bill for that purpose, and then carefully compare the faid supposed bill with the abovementioned clause of limitation, we should soon have reason to be convinced that the fecurity of the latter is only imaginary; and that multitudes of his majesty's innocent and peaceable subjects would be still liable to be oppressed, and be denied the benefits of public justice and common right, by such a suspension of law, if they should happen to incur the displeasure of persons in power, or be misrepresented to them by any secret enemy.

The proposed clause leaves unprotected all the nobility, gentry, and other persons whatsoever, that have made any excursions into France, Italy, Germany, Flanders, &c. or even to Ireland, ever fince the commencement of the troubles (whatever they might be) which occafioned an imaginary necessity, or plea, for suspending the LAWS. And this, perhaps, might be extended three or four years back, and might thereby exclude from the protection of the limiting clause a great multitude of the most refpectable people of the kingdom, who might happen to have travelled abroad during such a period. Neither does the clause protect the merchants, traders, and other persons, that have arrived from the West-Indies, Ireland, or any other country, country, within such a supposed period. And they are, surely, too numerous and respectable a body to be thus outlawed!

Add to this, that all feafaring Persons without exception (though they are the most valuable subjects of this maritime state) would be left unprotected by fuch a clause, and of course would be rendered subject to the unlimited WILL of man, (ARBITRIUM bominis, which is the true definition of ARBITRARY POWER,) instead of LAW! And, lastly, all other persons whatsoever are liable to suffer the same inconveniences, if they have not kept a diary, or have not memory or memorandums, to enable them to produce sufficient evidence of their being actually WITHIN THIS REALM at any period of time that might be fixed upon within the last three or four years; so that not only persons " feized and taken out of "THE REALM" would be made liable to the

[9]

the effects of fuch a suspending act, but all the other persons abovementioned, though they are actually RESIENT WITHIN THE REALM.

In order to state the case for my argument as clearly as I am able, I have here supposed the adoption of such a suspending bill as we might naturally conceive to be proposed by any set of men in power, who are warmed by the funshine of court-favour till they forget that their own real interest is inseparably connected with that of the public, and that the increase of power, which they promote, may possibly fall into some other hands than their own. But the hands of government must be strengthened, they would probably fay; and, for this purpose, they would be very apt to infert in their bill fome discretionary powers to enable the king and his ministers to imprison not only persons " seized and taken out of the

B

" realm."

"realm," but also persons " who shall be " committed in any part of his majesty's do-" minions for the faid crimes," I mean, any crimes which I have before supposed in stating this case, viz. " High-" treason in any of his majesty's colonies or " plantations in America, or ON THE "HIGH SEAS," (which will include our own coasts any where beyond lowwater mark,) " or the crime of piracy," without any description or limitation of place whatfoever! So that if any innocent man (who happens not to be able to prove an alibi for every day, and even every hour, fince these troubles began) should be maliciously "charged with" the crime of treason or piracy committed within half a mile of the British coasts, he may be seized and imprisoned, "without " bail or mainprize," at the will and pleafure of the king and council, for many months; and, at the expiration of the limited time, (without any farther examination mination or opportunity of being heard at all by his country,) his term of confinement is prolonged by another fuch act, and perhaps another after that, (as evil examples beget others,) till the time of his relief by "due process of the "law" becomes totally uncertain and indefinite!— A deplorable condition this! which, in our common law, is deemed "wretched slavery;"—for, "Misera" est servitus" (says the maxim) "ubi" jus est vagum aut incertum." (Principia leg. & Æq. p. 61.)

But the condition of the deluded subjects will be rendered still more completely uncertain and wretched, if the compilers of the supposed suspending act should endeavour to avail themselves of vague terms and expressions: — for instance, — (in the body of the bill,) — "Such crimes" (referring to the crimes particularly named in the former part) instead of "the faid crimes:"—for, as "Nullum simile est idem,"—("LIKE is "not the same,")— the expression, "fuch crimes," signifies only similar crimes, and not the same crimes before expressed, whereby the power of the act would be liable to an arbitrary extension at the will of the magistrate!

Whenever persons in power cease to be duly limited by a free parliament, they will pay but very little regard to the groffness of the propositions which they tender to that, once, august assembly; and therefore, if such an illegal power should ever be usurped by any set of men, we may then expect to find many more vague expressions in our public acts! - We may in that case, without improbability, suppose the penning of a fuspending act to be - not only " for " fuch crimes, OR ANY of them," but also " for suspicion of such

" CRIMES,

" CRIMES, or any of them, by any ma-" gistrate," &c. viz. any trading magistrate, pensioned Middlesex justice, or other wretched time-ferver, that may happen to be entrusted with a power of committing to prison. - And in such times it will afford a sufficient handle against any person whatsoever, if they are but " charged with" fuch crimes, whether they be guilty of them or not; or even if they be but "CHARGED " with" the " suspicion of such " crimes, or any of them, by ANY ma-" gistrate," &c. — Nothing more arbitrary or capricious can eafily be defcribed; and yet, alas! my supposed bill by no means exceeds the bounds of probability; for, when the baneful practice of bribery becomes triumphant, and the very foundations of government are thoroughly corrupted, we may expect that probability will still go farther, and that the above fupposed extraordinary powers will be farther augmented by a "non obstante," to trample down at once, not only the Habeas Corpus Act, but all the other fences of British liberty, national justice, and common right, on which the safety of Englishmen depends! viz. "any law, statute, or u- fage, to the contrary, in any wise not- withstanding."

powers

The clause is indeed a common one, for the repeal of useless or indifferent matters; but, when the effect extends to annul all the laws of personal protection, and the common right of Englishmen to "the due process of the law," (which is, to be tried without delay by their country, [per legem terræ,] and, if innocent, to be restored to freedom,)—fuch a suspension, I say, of common justice and common right is so sundamentally subversive of the British constitution of state, that no authority of parliament can make it legal; because it it is bigh-treason against the king and people! and all the abettors and promoters of fuch an act would thereby render themselves " eternally infamous" in the eye of the law! - which is declared by a constitutional maxim: - " LEGEM " TERRÆ amittentes PERPETUAM IN-" FAMIÆ NOTAM inde merito incurrunt." (3. inft. p. 221.) - "Those men, " who fet afide THE LAW OF THE " LAND," (which is certainly the case of those who vote for suspending it,) " do thereby incur a PERPETUAL STAIN " of INFAMY!"

[15]

If ever such an act, therefore, should subsist, and the promoters of it remain in power, British subjects may amuse themselves with the name of freedom if they please, but they will have no more real and just right to boast of their liberty than the subjects of France or Prussia!

For they would then be involved exactly in the same uncertain and precarious condition! And, though they might not, perhaps, for some considerable time afterwards, begin to feel the pernicious effects of a government unlimited by law, yet that would not render their condition less base or savish, for our common law has already stated the condition of fuch as an outlawed people: - " Res " est misera, ubi jus est vagum."* " WRETCHED is the state of affairs " wherever COMMON RIGHT is vague" and uncertain! --- Nay it is downright flavery, as declared by another maxim, already cited, in p. 11.

The learned Sir Robert Atkins (formerly one of the judges of the Common Pleas) has remarked, (concerning "the "pope's exercise of his power of dispen-"sing,"

^{* &}quot;Grounds and Rudiments of Law and Equity, "p. 304."

" fing," or rather of fuspending laws, by virtue of such a " non obstante,") that "it was used with some moderation " AT FIRST, in cases that seemed to " be of GREAT NECESSITY only; but " at last, by degrees, it grew to be in-" tolerable and unlimited." (See his parliamentary and political Tracts, p. 247.) And furely we ought to be equally jealous of every claim or pretenfion to omnipotence, or unlimited power, whenever and by whomfoever it is made, though we do not immediately feel the baneful effects of it.—There are but too many advocates for the imaginary omnipotence, or unlimited power, of parliament!

True it is, that the same persons, who are entrusted with authority to make laws, are entrusted likewise with authority to suspend or repeal them; but in this (without the least detriment to their just liberty and free privileges) they are not without limitation. Even liberty itfelf is limited, and submits to the same fort of definition; for "liberty" (fays an old and eminent law-writer) " is not a " power to act, quidquid libet, what we " list, (for this may be licentious, and a " lust or passion may enslave a man" [or men] " as much as any chain or fetter,) " but, quod licet, what is just and ratio-" nal." (" Rights of the Kingdom, p. " 136.") And, in the preceding page, fpeaking expreflly of the house of commons, or parliaments, he fays: --"When they are FREEST they have LI-" MITS, for they be NOT INFINITE. " Nay, when they are MOST FREE, they " are MOST BOUND to GOOD ORDERS " and TO RIGHT REASON." The truth of this doctrine is unquestionable: for, if a parliament, or legislative power of any kind, (regal or popular,) presume to enact ordinances which oppose, or in any respect set aside, natural justice, or the common right of innocent persons, and shall claim an authority or privilege to do so, (which is ignorantly and vainly called omnipotence of parliament,) the said power ceases to be a legal power, because it casts off the restraint and government of God's indispensable laws, and thereby becomes excommunicated from God!

C

"Shall the throne of iniquity have" fellowship with thee, which frameth significant mischief by A LAW?" (Psalm xciv. 20.)

A due consideration of this ought to restrain the modern rage of act-making! for it is laid down, in that ancient and respectable law-book, called FLETA, that "the power of RIGHT (or justice) is of God alone, but the power of WRONG (or injury) is of the DEVIL; and the works of which sever of these two," (viz. of God or of the devil,) "he shall C 2 "do."

" do," (speaking of the agency of a king, and the same may surely be said also of a parliament,) " of him he is the " fervant."* And to this doctrine, as an unquestionable truth, that illustrious lawyer, Henry de Bracton, (who was a judge in this realm above 530 years ago,) has made the following addition: -"Therefore," (fays he, still speaking of a king,) " while he DOES JUSTICE he is " the vicar of the ETERNAL KING; but " he is the SERVANT OF THE DEVIL while " he declines to injustice or wrong." + And, in like manner, a parliament, or the ^{* &}quot;Potestas enim juris solius of DEI, injurize ve" ro diaboli, et, cujus opera secerit, ejus et minister

" erit." (Fleta, c. xvii. p. 17.)

^{† &}quot;Quia illa potestas" (potestas juris) "folius "Dei est; potestas autem injuriæ diaboli, et non "Dei; et, cujus horum opera fecerit rex, ejus mi"nister erit cujus opera fecerit." (And then follows the addition quoted above.) "Igitur, dum facit" justitiam, vicarius est Regis setenni; minister "autem diaboli, dum declinet ad injuriam." Brack. lib. iii. c. 9, p. 107.

the persons entrusted with the power of legislation, are to be esteemed as the servants of the devil, and as enemies to God, while they promote or establish any notorious injustice: for, "Know ye not, "that, to whom ye yield yourselves serwants, to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin, unto death, or of obedience, unto righteoustices?" (Rom. vi. 16.)

Many laws there are which belong to God as well as man, and which are therefore to be esteemed as parts of the E-TERNAL LAW: i.e. the WILL of God that all things be moved and directed to a good and proper end; a perpetual and constant WILL to give to every one his RIGHT; ‡ and

^{† &}quot;LEX ÆTERNA nihil aliud est quam ipsa summa ra"tio gubernationis rerum in Deo, sive illa summa ratio
"DIVINÆ SAPIENTIÆ, qua vult Deus omnia ase con"dita, moveri, et dirigi, ad bonum et del tum si"nem" - 8:c. And again: "Invæterna su

[&]quot; nem,"—&c. And again: " Lex Æterna, jub no right can be more facred than the right of an innocent man to obtain FREE-DOM, by " due process of the law," from duress and unjust imprisonment: for, " LIBERTY is inestimable;" (" libertas est " res inestimabilis," Jenk. cent. 52.) and " is planted BY GOD in the very na-" ture of man." (" Libertas a Deo ho-" minis est indita naturæ." Fortescu de laud. Leg. Ang. 41.) So that " bu-" man nature intreats (or implores) fa-" vour in the CAUSE OF LIBERTY more " than in any other cause;" and consequently the man, who "does not favour " the cause of LIBERTY," is already condemned, in our common law, as " imse pious

[&]quot; alia descriptione, dicitur PERPETUA et CONSTANS
" VOLUNTAS JUS SUUM unicuique tribuens," &c.
Doct. et Stud. c. i. p. 2.

^{| — &}quot;Humana natura in libertatis causa savorem femper, MAGIS QUAM IN ALIIS CAUSIS, deprecedur," &c. 1b. c. xlvii, p. 109.

" pious and cruel." And, in like manner, every act of parliament, or statute, which is unfavourable thereto, (by reducing freedom and augmenting flavery,) must necessarily be esteemed equally obnoxious and inimical to GoD and MAN: -- for, "CRUDELIS etiam NECESSARIO " judicabitur LEX, quæ servitutem aug-" mentat et minuit libertatem." (Fortescu, c. 41.) And, as this "will of God," respecting the right of men, is, in the above quotation, declared to be "perpe-" tual and constant," it necessarily follows, that no buman authority upon earth can suspend or annul any part of the eternal law, without grievous fin! for our first allegiance is made in baptism to God and his laws: and the latter confist not merely in the written injunctions of divine revelation, (which we call the scriptures,) but also in reason and natural justice ;

^{§ &}quot;Impius et crudelis judicandus est qui libertati en non favet." Co. Lit. 124.

tice; the knowledge of which (though it is a divine attribute) is inherited by mankind in general, and written in their bearts; or else there could be no such thing as the imputation of fin! THE LAW OF REASON is therefore justly efleemed the first foundation of the laws of England: -" Primum fundamentum " legis Angliæ est lex rationis." (Doct. et Stud. c. v. p. 14.) And " the law of " reason" includes " the laws of nature," which cannot lawfully be suspended or changed by parliament; for our common law declares that they are immutable:-" Jura [&]quot;" Scribiturque bæc lex" (lex rationis) "in corde cujuf" libet hominis, docens eum quid agendum, et quid "fugiendum, unde dicit apostolus ad Romanos secundo. Omnes gentes, qui legem S. scriptam non habent natue" Raliter, ea quæ legis sunt faciunt, bujusmodi legem non habentes ipsi sibi sunt lex, qui ostendunt opus legis scriptum in cordibus suis, testimonium reddente lillis conscientia ipsorum." Et, quod lex rationis in corde scribitur, ideo deleri non potest, nec etiam recepit mutationem, ex loco nec tempore; sed ubique, et inter omnes homines, servari debet. "Nam" jura naturalia immutabilia sunt," &c. Doct. et Stud. c. ii. p. 5.

" Jura naturæ funt immutabilia." (Prin. Leg. et Æquit. p. 46.) "The " laws of nature are unchangeable:" they cannot therefore be lawfully fufpended or changed by parliament; neither can any manifest injustice be made lawful: for, by the same authority, we know, that " LEX INJUSTA non est " LEX." " An unjust ordinance" (or act of parliament) " is not law."---No plea of necessity could render such a parliamentary exertion even excuseable; for, though there are many maxims on this head, as " Necessitas non " habet legem;" and " Salus populi" (which even bad legislators will pretend to regard) " suprema est lex;" - " Ne-" cessitas facit licitum quod aliàs non est " licitum; - " Necessitas vincet legem.". Yet these can relate only to such laws as are made to remedy inconveniences, not in themselves evil, mere mala probibita; but cannot authorize any thing that is malum in se; for that would be RE-BEILION AGAINST GOD, which no case can justify. For, of those who say " Let " us do evil that good may come;" the Scripture has added, " Whose damnation is " just." (Rom. iii. 8.) " Fiat justitia, ruat " cælum," is, therefore, a found maxim both of law and politics; so that no necessity whatever can justify the establishment of any injustice, without a remedy: and no injustice, evil, tort, wrong, or iniquity, can be more flagrant or more dangerous to the state than an unnecessary delay of common right and justice to an innocent man, whose perfonal liberty is unjustly invaded; for, if " personal liberty" is not secured and protected BY EQUAL LAW, no property, or other rights whatsoever, can have any real value; and from thence it arises that the common right of every innocent person to the laws of protection, is esteemed our highest and most valuable inheritance:

inheritance; for, " Major bæreditas " venit unicuique nostrum a jure et le-" GIBUS quam a parentibus;" " A greater " inheritance descends to every one of us " from" (the constitutional establishment of) " right* and the laws than from our pa-" rents."—A " non obstante;" therefore, which boldly fuspends at once all the ancient constitutional laws of personal protection, and leaves an innocent man without a remedy, cannot be LAW, being contrary to all that ought to be esteemed law; for, " Lex nemini operatur iniquum, nemini fa-" cit injuriam;" "Law works no iniquity to " any man, does injury to no man:" and, " Quicquid est contra normam RECTI est " injuria:" D 2

[&]quot;It is called RIGHT," (fays the lord Coke, 2nd inst. p. 56,) "because it is the BEST BIRTHRIGHT "the subject bath; for thereby his goods, lands, wife, children, HIS BODY," (for it is the birthright and best protection of every honest SEAMAN, as well as of all other men,) "life, honour, and estimation, are PRO"TECTED from injury and avrong:" (and then he cites the MAXIM:)—"Major hæreditas," &c.

" injuria;" " whatever is contrary to the " rule of RIGHT, is INJURY:"- and "Tort à la ley est contrary." Co. Lit. 158. "Wrong is contrary to law," and therefore " whatever is done CON-"TRARY TO LAW" (or " makes against " law") " ought to be esteemed as " UNDONE." - " Pro infecto babetur," (fays the maxim;) " Quod contra legem " fit pro infecto habetur;" fo that the examples, that have been cited as precedents for suspending the laws of liberty and protection, are no precedents of justification; for the legislative power of difpenfing with laws, extends only to those laws which relate to mala probibita, as I have before remarked, (" Dispensatio est " MALI PROHIBITI provida relaxatio " utilitate communi pensata,") and cannot effect the laws of natural justice and common constitutional right; because an act of parliament for any fuch purpole pose must be a malum in se, and consequently is null and word in itself.

[29]

The king has no power, nor can be allowed any power, to defer, posipone, or suspend, that equal and right justice which is due, by inheritance, to all British subjects, (to common failors as well as others,) without respect of persons; because the king subscribed Magna Charta when he received the Holy Sacrament at his coronation, (of which the author of this protest is an eye-wirness, being very near the king's person at that time,) whereby he has promifed before God and the people, that he will delay or deny to none right or justice; - " Nulli negabimus aut " differemus justitiam vel recium;" (cap. xxix.) fo that this excludes all power of suspending any of the laws on which justice or right depend! The king, therefore, must neither delay justice himfelf, nor be, in any way, instrumental in preventing preventing his judges from proceeding to do justice according to Magna Charta and the other ancient and fundamental laws of the land; for the judges are also sworn to " deny to no man common right, by the " king's letters, nor none other man's, nor " for none other cause." (See the oath made 18 Edward III. Keble's Statutes, p. 110.) This wary expression in the oath, (viz. " for none other cause,) excludes all possibility of admitting any exception whatfoever; fo that the fworn judges are so bound to God, the king, and the people, (for they are fworn to " ferve the people" as well as the king,) that they must not obey even an act of parliament which fets afide this matter of " common right," I mean the common right of PERSONAL LIBERTY to all ranks of men that are innocent from crimes and free from debt.

Some

^{* &}quot;Ye shall swear, and well and lawfully ye shall "serve our lord the king, AND HIS PEOPLE, in the office of justice, &c."

Some worthy men, zealous for the privileges of parliament, are, indeed, unwilling to admit this feeming independence of the judges, in the administration of justice or common right; which, by their oaths, they are to " deny to no man:" but the just privileges of parliament never can be injured by the independence of the judges in this single point; because, if a judge is so scrupulous, or conscientious, that he refuses to enforce or obey an unjust statute, it is still in the power of parliament to impeach or discharge him from his office for disobedience, so that the loss would fall only upon the honest and worthy judge, though the dishonour of the injustice would rest where it began! Nevertheless, while judges remain in office, they must not acknowledge any obligation fuperior to that which they owe to natural justice and the laws of God; for they are bound to God (as I have have already remarked) by the nature of their office, as well as to the king and the people; though this first and most binding obligation is not expressed in their oath; yet the Scripture fays, " The " judgement is God's;" (Deut. i. 17.) and again, " Ye judge not for man, but " for THE LORD, who is with you in the " JUDGEMENT:" (2 Chron. ix. 6.) and, therefore, neither the judges nor the king himself are to be accounted laymen, but " ministers of God," for righteousness, justice, and judgement. - By the two latter, in the prefent case, I do not mean penal justice or judgement, but the duties of maintaining the "common right" of innocent persons, and of relieving the oppressed. These are, in a peculiar manner, facred to God, and, therefore, unalienable from the people, and not to be fufpended by the authority of parliament; because the commands of God, in these matters, are peremptory, and can admit of no exceptions. "Thus faith the " Lord," (Jehovah,) " Krep ye judge-" ment and do justice," (Isaiah lvi. 1.) which is diametrically opposite to the measure of suspending or postponing them. And again, -" KEEP mercy and JUDGE-" MENT, and wait on thy God CONTINU-" ALLY" or " ALWAYS:" (Hof. xii. 6.) fo that there never can be any time of danger, or difficulty, fo preffing and urgent as to justify the plea of a NECESSITY for the suspension of justice and judgement, when demanded by innocent persons under illegal restraint or duress! For, prisoners, that are really guilty, will not demand judgement, (by writs of Habeas Corpus,) for fear of the penal statutes; and even if such prisoners (trusting, at any time, to the want of fufficient evidence against them) should demand judgement, and thereby escape: yet it is better that TEN offenders should escape penal justice, than that ONE innocent man should suffer by the denial or suspension of " common right." -" Melius est ut DECEM NOXII evadant, " quam ut unus innocens pereat." ---For herein the difference between the fort of justice and judgement, for which I contend, and penal justice, (which may be fulpended by competent authority,) is manifested, viz. that THE RIGHTEOUS " JUDGE OF ALL THE WORLD" declared himself willing to suspend his penal judgement against A WHOLE NATION of notorious convicted offenders, rather than he would involve TEN innocent persons in their destruction, if so many could have been found among them! This fentiment of divine justice was revealed, for our instruction, to a man, who was honoured with the testimony of being inclined to "KEEP the way of the Lord;"—and "the " way of the Lord," (as the following words declare,) is - " to Do justice and " judgement," (Gen. xviii. 19-33.) ---Th

E

The suspension, therefore, of "justice " and judgement" from innocent persons, is plainly the reverse of "KEEPING the " way of the Lord!" Wherefore,-" Let it suffice you, O princes of Israel; " remove violence and spoil, and EXECUTE JUDGEMENT AND JUSTICE;" (which is the very reverse of suspending them!) " take away your exactions from my people, " faith the Lord." (Ezek. xlv. 9.) " Cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek " judgement; RIGHTEN the OPPRESSED;" (for this is plainly the kind of judgement; which, in the former texts, God has commanded men to KEEP, and which, therefore, ought never to be suspended;) " judge the fatherless; plead for the wi-" dow." (Isaiah i. 16, 17.)

It is also necessary to remark the divine testimony against those who suspended or did not "KEEP justice and judgement;" but, on the contrary, devised wicked ordinances:-" They conceive mischief, and bring " forth iniquity. They hatch cockatrice " eggs, and weave the spider's web," &c. All which may well be faid of those who enact wicked statutes to ensnare and oppress the people! And again, "The " act of violence is in their hands. Their " feet run to evil, and they make hafte to " SHED INNOCENT BLOOD: their " thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; WAST-" ING AND DESTRUCTION are in their " paths. THE WAY OF PEACE THEY " KNOW NOT; and" (there is) " NO " JUDGEMENT in their goings;" (meaning no legal judgement, or " due process " of the law;" for the Hebrew word is משבט properly fignifying a legal decifion, as DDW also fignifies a JUDGE;) " they have made them crooked paths; (which may furely be faid of wicked or unjust laws, but more especially of any law to suspend or annul the law itself!) " whosoever goeth therein shall not know

E 2

" PEACE.

" PEACE. Therefore is JUDGEMENT " far from us, (meaning that " the due pro-" cess of the law," or proper LEGAL decision, is far from us; for it is the same Hebrew word as before;) " neither doth "RIGHTEOUSNESS"*(or "commonright") " reach us," &c. (Isaiah lix. 4--9.) And again, the 14th and 15th verses of the fame chapter, demonstrate, that what I have already cited from it relates to the failure of justice and judgement, or the suspension of due legal process! "And " judgement" (faid the prophet) "is turned " away backward; and justice" (or rather " common RIGHT" as I have before remarked; for the Hebrew word is ארכה " RIGHTEOUSNESS") " STANDETH A-" FAR OFF: for TRUTH is fallen in the " freet."

^{*} In the common version it is rendered,—" neither " doth JUSTICE overtake us:" which is liable to be understood in a contrary sense from the original as it it referred to penal justice, whereas the Hebrew word is IPTY (properly righteousness); which (as it is due to all men) may justly be understood to signify that which in our English law is called " common right."

" freet," (i.e. the TRUTH of conviction or acquittal, by legal process, "is fallen,") " and EQUITY cannot enter;" (which must generally be the case when WILL is set up above law! but hear the prophet,) " Yes; TRUTH" (fays he) " faileth; " and he that departeth from evil maketh " himself a prey:" (or, as we read in the margin, "is accounted mad:" i. e. in the opinion of those detestable politicians who " do evil that good may come:") " and " the Lord" (Jehovah) " faw! and it " displeased him that there was no judge= " MENT!" (מי מין משפט — fo that it can never be either lawful or expedient to remove the " due process of the law" from the reach of innocent persons, by suspenfion, or in any other manner,). " And " be faw that (there was) no man:" that is,-no man to stand in the gap for the defence of his ETERNAL LAW, which is explained by the 4th verse, - " None " calleth for justice," (PTVI more properly. perly for RIGHTEOUSNESS, or "THE " common right" of the people,) " nor " any pleadeth for truth," &c. [Neither prince, prelate, nor judge, it seems, were inclined to enter a protest in favour of immutable justice and right! — Horrible depravity!) " And he" (the almighty) " wondered that there was no intercessor! " therefore his arm brought salvation unto " him; and his righteousness, it fuf-" tained him. For he put on RIGHTEOUS-" NESS as a breast-plate: and an belmet " of falvation" (i. e. in behalf of the poor, and those that were unjustly oppressed) " upon his head; and he put on " the garments of VENGEANCE (for) " cloathing; and was clad with ZEAL as a " cloke. (And then follows," THE LAW " of RETRIBUTION;). " According to their deeds, accordingly he will repay, -FURY to his adversaries, RECOMPENCE" (or retribution) " to his enemies, to THE ISLANDS be will REPAY RETRIBUTION!" Where Where then (if we have any belief in God's eternal law) is the boasted " omnipotence of parliament!" Or, who can be truly " loyal," in the proper sense of that epithet, but those who acknowledge that the former is unchangeable, and that " com-" mon right," and the justice due to innocent persons, can never be suspended without rebellion against Gon! For there is no falvation for man without CHARI-TY; and our common law teaches us,that " the bigbest" (and therefore the most indispensable) " CHARITY is to do " JUSTICE to all and every fingle foul at " ALL TIMES:"-- fo that A TIME of NECESSITY (I mean such a time as is generally called fo) will afford but a poor excuse for so notorious a breach of this " first principle of CHARITY;" "Summa CARITAS est facere Justi-"TIAM fingulis et omnibus OMNI TEM-"PORE."-My countrymen, in general, I fear are too depraved to bear all the truths truths of my remonstrance; but I cannot now be filent without guilt!

[41]

Many are the limitations of "the law of "reason," (too numerous to be here recited,) which necessarily annul all asts of legislature that unhappily exceed them, if the "first foundation of the "English law" (already mentioned in p. 24.) be duly regarded. And the second foundation of our excellent legal establishment acknowledges no fewer limitations of legislature than there are divine precepts of morality and justice in the Holy Scriptures. For "THE SECOND FOUNDA-

Fin Fin

^{† &}quot;Against this law," (i. e. the law of reason,) to prescription, STATUTE, nor custom, may not prevail; and, if any be brought in against it, they be not pressed for statutes, nor customs, but" (corruptele, CORRUPTIONS†) "things woid and ogainst justice." (Doct. et Stud. Eng. ed. 1663, p. 5.)

^{‡ — &}quot;Et contra eam" (viz. legem rationis) "non est prascript o vel ad appositum statutum, sive consuetudo: et, si aliqua siant, non sunt statuta, sive consuetudinee, sed consuetue." (Doct, et Stud. c. ii. p. 5. ed. Lat.)

"TION of the law of England is the LAW of God:" against which the haughty "omnipotence of parliament" (the pope of England) has not the least authority to ordain any thing! infomuch, that "if "ANY STATUTE is set forth AGAINST" them, it ought to be esteemed of NO "FORCE in the law of England." For, if FOUNDATIONS are removed, the whole fabric of our law and political constitution must precipitate into destruction!

I appeal to the JUDGES THEMSELVES for the truths which I here affert. They know the foundations of our law: they know that there are many maxims of a superior order § which bear ample testimony to [&]quot;Etiam, si aliquod statutum esse editum contra "eos;" [probably mis-written for eas, (leges divinas,) or eam (legem divinam)]; "nullius vigoris in legibus "Angliæ censeri debet:" &c. Doct. et Stud. c. vi. p. 18. b.

[§] By maxims of a superior order, I mean, those inevitable and necessary conclusions of reason, which belong to my doctrine; that justice or "common." right" can never be suspended, without subverting the legal constitution of this kingdom!—"Si a JURE discedas VA-"GUS eris, et erunt omnia omnibus IN-"CERTA;" (Co. Lit. 227.) and "Res" est misera;"—"Misera est servitus ubi" JUS est VAGUM aut INCERTUM;"*

(4 Inst. 246.) wherefore, — "Justitia" nemini neganda est. + Justitia est cuili-"bet facienda. ‡ Injusticia non est alicui F 2 belong to the first foundation of English law: for, though these may be justly included also in the fourth foundation of our law, under the general head of Maxims, yet they ought to be duly distinguished from those less obvious maxims which relate only to the general customs of the kingdom, and have no claim to be ranked higher than the fourth foundation.

^{¶ &}quot;If you depart from COMMON RIGHT, you will be become wague," (or unsettled,) and all things will be uncertain to all men."

[•] Affairs are in a wretched state,"—nay, "it is de" plorable slavery, wherever justice" (or common right)
" is vague or uncertain."

^{+ &}quot; Justice must be denied to no man."

t " Justice must be done to every man whatsoever."

" cienda. | Justitia non est neganda, non " DIFFERENDA." § (Jenk. Cent. 93.)-And, therefore, no plea of necessity whatever can excuse so great an evil as a sus-PENSION of justice or common right! This is confirmed also by another maxim, « Melius est OMNIA MALA pati quant " malo consentire." ¶ (3 Inst. 23.) How much soever any particular man, in authority, may be either inclined, or think himself obliged to accommodate his opinion to the present times of violence and injustice, yet, I flatter myself, that there: is not a fingle judge in the kingdom, who will venture to fet his face against these indispensable conclusions of reason; and, therefore, to the judges I have appealed for the truth of my affertion; that every act [&]quot; Injustice must not be done to any man whatsoever."

^{§ &}quot;Justice must neither be denied nor delayed," i.e. nor ^{¶ &}quot; It is better to endure ALL adversities than to assent to ONE evil measure"!

act of parliament which contains any thing in it contrary to these first " princi-" ples of reason and honesty," is null and void; -is a corruption, and not law! For statutes,—" Nec contra RATIONEM, " nec contra LEGEM DIVINAM existunt."* (Doct. et Stud. c. 10. de Diversis Statutis.) because " Hæ duæ leges declinari " non possunt:"+ (ib. c. 17.) and because the holy Scriptures denounce WO against the makers of unjust laws. - "Wo unto " them that decree UNRIGHTEOUS DE-" CREES," (or laws,) " and write grie-" vousness (which) they have prescribed: to " turn afide the needy from judgement;" (which, in Ifrael, was a judgement of peers; the judgement of the congregation) " and " to take away the right" (or rather " the judgement" or " process of the law;" for the

^{* &}quot;Statutes " cannot exist either against REASON, or the LAW DIVINE."

[†] Because "these two laws" (the law of reason and the law of God) "cannot abate or turn aside."

the Hebrew word is DDDD) "from the "poor of my people, that widows may be "their prey, and that they may rob the fa"therless." (And then follows the retribution, which proves that there never can be any NECESSITY for INJUSTICE.)
"And what will you do in the day of visitation,
"and in the desolation (which) shall come from far? To whom will you flee for belp? and where will ye leave your glowry?" [or, (in the plural,) your honours?]
(Isai. x. 1—3.).

No necessity, therefore, whatever, can justify the adoption of an unrighteous or unjust measure, by any legislature upon earth; because no danger or evil what-soever is so much to be dreaded as God's vengeance for the failure of justice, judgement, and rightcousness; and, therefore, common right" and equal justice, which belong to God, for the good of his people, are so interwoven and united with the legal constitution of these kingdoms, that to fet them aside, by public authority, amounts to a total subversion of the common law, and, of course, to the legal constitution of these kingdoms, which no act of parliament can effect; for that (with respect to the legislature) would be a fort of felo de se,+ à crime of the highest treason in all who voted for it! for which they are liable to be impeached by the great body of the nation, in case a political reformation should take place; and precedents are not wanting for inflicting capital punishment on judg-Es, for enforcing unjust laws, though the fame had obtained the fanction of parliament. To fubmit the operation of law to the WILL of the king and coun-· cil.

^{† &#}x27;Whatever is destructive of the law cannot itself be law; for then the law would be felo de se: "Lex quæ leges avertit, ipsa lex esse non potest;" a thing divided against itself, and therefore will not stand." Ubi non est pudor, nec cura juris, instabile regnum est." Judge Atkins, p. 221.

cil, (which is done by this supposed act; t) would tend to annul even THE KING'S AUTHORITY; for, it is laid down as an established principle of the British constitution, by one of the best authorities in our common law, that " there is no king where will rules, and " not law:" " Non est enim rex, ubi "dominatur voluntas et non lex;" fo that a king of England ceases to be king, when he ceases to be limited by the LAW: as another old constitutional maxim also informs us, " The law is the most high in-" heritance that the king has; for, if the " LAW was not, there would be NO KING " nor inheritance;" § and another maxim.

^{† &}quot;That no judge or justice of peace shall bail or try "any fuch person or persons, without order from his "majesty's most honourable privy-council, &c. any "law, statute, usage, &c. notwithstanding;" boldly subverting at once the whole legal constitution.

^{§ &}quot;Le ley est le plus haute inhéritance que le roi ad: car par la ly il-même et tous ses sujets sont ru- lés; et, si le ley ne suit, nul roi et nul inhéritance se sera." Year Book, 19 Hen. VI. 63.

im fays, " Cessa regnare, si non vis judi-" care." " Cease to reign, if you will not " do justice." - The king, therefore, must not deny or delay common right; and the insertion of a " non obstante," to set aside at once all the laws, statutes, and usages, of the kingdom, respecting THE PERSON-AL PROTECTION of the subject, is a manifest subversion of our legal constitution, and confequently is HIGH-TREAson against the king, as well as against the state, and the latter is declared to be no less a crime than the former; " Non minor est proditio LEGIS, quam "REGEM velle perdere." --- So that fuch an attempt against the law is not only a most dangerous undermining of the king's crown and dignity, but the highest act of treason and DISLOYALTY in the strictest sense of the word: as no man can be LOYAL who votes for a general fuspension of all the LAWS and fences of that most valuable right of the subject, the right to personal liberty!

[50]

Such a suspension of law is too similar to that non obstante of pope Innocent IV. "whereby" (as the proctors of king Henry III. declared) " common right was " annulled, and authentic records render-" ed void." — " Per quam jus pro nihilo " babetur et authentica scripta enervan-" tur." (Judge Atkins Parl. Tracts, p. 212.) And the same learned judge remarks, that ' it is part of the description ' given of antichrist, by the prophet Da-' niel, c. 7.' " He shall think that he may " change times and laws, and they shall " be given into his hands." (P. 218.) In the following paragraph he also cites bp. Jewel's Exposition upon the Epistle to the Theffalonians, (fol. 131.) viz. " Antichrist" (says the bishop) " is there " called o avoyos, a man without order " or LAW, that man of fin; which is one " of " of the peculiar notes of antichrist."
" He shall seek to be free, and go at " liberty; he shall be tied to No LAW,
" neither of God nor man." ' Hence
' it is said of the pope, that he is " So" lutus omni lege humana. In iis
" quæ vult, est ei pro ratione volun" tas, nec est qui dicat illi, Domine, cur ita " facis? Ille potest supra jus dispen" sare, et de injustitia facere justitiam, " corrigendo jura et mutando."

To set up the WILL and PLEASURE of man, therefore, above LAW, or to pretend to give a power to the king, or bis privy-council, to suspend the fundamental LAWS of the kingdom, is to render them o' avoyor, lawless and unlimited, like the princes and powers of Antichrist, foretold in the second Psalm, who say, — "Let us break their" bonds as a funder, and cast away their cords from us;" viz. the bonds of reason, law, law, and natural justice, and the cords of allegiance to divine authority; for, to this effect, I have seen a remark upon the text, by judge Atkins, though I cannot at present find the passage. An act of parliament for fo base a purpose, as the establishment of an unlimited power, is so far from deserving the name of law, that it must necessarily be deemed a subversion of law; as it sets up the will and pleasure of man (king and council) above the operation of law, contrary to a fundamental principle of the constitution. " More SECURE, as well as MORE POW-" ERFUL, is the effect (or operation) of " LAW, than the WILL and PLEASURE of " man;" " Firmior et potentior est opera-" tio LEGIS quam DISPOSITIO hominis;" (Co. Lit. 102.) because, " the man who " is allowed more power than is just and " equal, will affect still more than is al-" lowed:" " Cui plus licet quam par est, " plus vult quam licet." (2 Inst. 464.).

From the unhappy experience of all nations, in all ages, this established doctrine of our common law may be amply proved; and, with respect to the supposed act in question, it is certainly liable to afford such opportunity and temptation to promote unjust charges against innocent persons; (arming a particular party with unconstitutional powers of oppression and iniquity, to intimidate all honest and independant people;) that it is manifestly a malum in se, (as I have faid,) which can never be made lawful; nay, the whole business is so disloyal that it feems to be nothing less than " framing mischief by a law," which is the most dangerous as well as most iniquitous mode of oppression; because it amounts to an apostacy from God! as the Scriptures declare, " Shall the throne of iniquity have " fellowship with thee, which formeth mis-" chief by a law?" (Pf. 94. 20.) And again, again, " Wo be to them that decree un-" righteous decrees, and that write griev-" ousness which they have prescribed, to " turn afide the needy from judgement," &c. The very case in point! Isaiah x. 12. See pages 19, 33, 41, 44, and 45.— We are bound, by our baptifinal vow, to " renounce the devil and all his works," and of course it is our duty to refist and oppose evil to the utmost of our power; otherwise we deserve not to be ranked with the fervants and foldiers of the " prince of peace," because he is, also, the king of RIGHTEOUSNESS; and, therefore, in a Christian community, every private person, every individual, has an undoubted right to detect and protest against every iniquity and injustice, even though it shall have obtained the fanction of the public legislature; and it is a maxim of the common law, that " Unusquisque " paci et justitiæ publicæ tenetur succur-" rere;" but the judges are still more particularly particularly bound (both on account of their learning and office) to point out and reject every ordinance of man that is contrary to natural justice and the laws of God. And so far is it from being their duty to obey, or enforce, any fuch laws, that the common law has provided them a ready answer for refusing the functions of their office in such cases; - " Contra " justitiam nibil possumus:" for, though they are officers of the king and people, and fit in the king's judgement feat, judging in his name; yet their duty respecting common right and natural justice does not depend on the king, nor any other, but on God alone, as I have already remarked; for they "judge not for man, " but for the Lord," &c. (2d Chron. xix. 6, 7.) — And again, — " Ye " shall not be afraid of the face of man," (which excludes all partial influence of kings or any other human powers,) " for " the judgement is God's." (Deut. i. 16, 16, 17.).—And all judges ought to be deeply impressed with that indispensable doctrine of our common law, that "it" is infinitely more beinous to offend ETER-"NAL than TEMPORAL majesty!" for it is a maxim,—"Gravius est ETERNAM" quam TEMPORALEM ledere MAJES-"TATEM."—Thus stands THE LAW OF GOD respecting judges; and THE LAW OF GOD is always to be esteemed an unalienable and unchangeable part of THE LAW OF ENGLAND! (See p. 42, 45.)

Both the king and his judges are fworn (as I have already observed, p.29, 30.) not to delay or deny common right; and, therefore, no danger, or other evil whatsoever, (against which men have ever pleaded a NECESSITY of suspending the laws of protection from innocent persons,) can be so great an evil, or be so imminently dangerous in itself, as that very measure of suspension! No NECESSITY whatsoever can be so deplorable, or so disgracefully injurious to the state, as the measure itself! and, therefore, there never can be a necessity for such a MEASURE; and the same may be said, with unquestionable truth, concerning every other MEASURE of oppression and injustice; but more particularly may it be said of that other most notorious and iniquitous mode of suspending, or rather annulling, all the laws of British freedom, in the case of seamen;

[57]

I mean the IMPRESSING ‡ them into ser-

H vice

† The form of press-warrants, and the expressions used therein, may, perhaps, be very ancient; and those expressions, (viz. impress and press-money,) perhaps, according to the ancient meaning of them, may be innocent and legal: but no right or prerogative, either by usage or prescription, is thereby to be presumed in favour of the modern sense in which they are now usually interpreted: viz. as a warrant to take a man by force, to drag him away, like a thief, to a sloating prison (the most dangerous and detestable of all others); that, by imprisonment and duress, he may be compelled to enter into an involuntary servitude! What is this but a true definition of the most absolute slavery!—And yet it is equally true when applied to vice by force and violence, which the most dissolute of public ministers never presumed the case of pressed seamen on-board the tenders and hulks. But let us examine by what authority this is done, and then judge whether the supposed prerogative is legal. The warrant is signed by the lords commissioners of the admiralty and their secretary, who claim no other authority in their justification than what is expressed in the beginning of the warrant:—viz.——"In tursuance of his majesty's order in council, dated,"—&c. &c.

Now, unhappily for the lords of the admiralty and their fecretary, (if they should be duly prosecuted for their missemeanor,) neither his majesty nor the privy-council (neither any of them separately, nor all of them together) have any legal power to commit, or distrain an innocent man of his liberty; because all power for any such purposes was taken from them by authority of parliament, and the act is still in sulf force. See 16 Cha. I. c. x. The purpose of this act is expressly "for the regulating the privy-council," as well as "for taking away the court commonly called the "far-chamber."

In the preamble of this act the Great Charter is cited,—that—" No freeman stall be TAKEN, or IM"PRISONED, or distinct of his freehold, or LIBER"TIES, &c. but hy lowoful judgement of his peers, or by the "law of the land;" and also (besides several others) that inestimable statute of 28 Edw. III. cap. iii. that "No man, of what estate or condition soever he be, shall "be put out of his lands or tenements, nor TAKEN, nor "IMPRISONED.

[59]

fumed to palliate, or excuse, by any of ther plea than this mere bugbear, NE-CESSITY!

H₂ It

" IMPRISONED, &c. without being brought in to answer "BY DUE PROCESS OF LAW :"-fo that the whole statute of 16 Cha. I. c. x. must be construed according to the true spirit of these golden laws of liberty; and more especially the 8th session of it, where we read-"That, if ANY PERSON" (here can be no exception to the prejudice of seamen) "fhall hereafter be COMMITTED, " RESTRAINED OF HIS LIBERTY, or SUFFER IM-" PRISONMENT, by the order or decree of any such court " of flar-chamber," &c. (mentioning feveral other courts, and then adds,) or by the command or WAR-" RANT of THE KING'S MAJESTY, his heirs or Succes-" fors, in their own person, or by the command or WAR-" RANT of the COUNCEL-BOARD, or of any of the lords, " or others of HIS MAJESTY'S PRIVY-COUNCIL, that, " in EVERY fuch case, EVERY PERSON, so committed, " restrained of his liberty, or suffering imprisonment," [which necessarily includes the case of "every person" -" restrained of his liberty," or " taken, or imprison-" ed" by a press-avarrant; especially as " his majesty's " order in council" (which is expressly limited by this act) is the only authority cited by the admiralty for issuing such warrants, since the clause of " non obstante " flatuto" has been declared voin in law.] " upon de-" mand, or metien made," (fays the act,) " by his coun-" fel, or other employed by him for that purpose, unto the " judges of the court of king's-Bench, cr com-" MON-PLEAS, in open court, SHALL, WITHOUT DE

It is a practice so notoriously repugnant to common right and equity, so fundamentally

" LAY UPON ANY PRETENCE WHATSOEVER, for the ordinary dues usually paid for the same, have forthwith " granted unto bim a writ of HABEAS CORPUS, to " be directed generally unto all and every sheriff, goaler, minister, Officer, or other person, in whose custody " the party so committed or restrained shall be," &c. (And, after describing the mode of making the return to the writ, the statute directs the court that they)-" hall thereupon do what to justice shall appertain; either by delivering, bailing, or REMANDING, the or prisoner: and, if any thing shall be otherwise wilfully 45 done, or omitted to be done, BY ANY JUDGE, JUS-" TICE, OFFICER, or other person aforementioned, con-" trary to the direction and TRUE MEANING bereef," (necessarily including the "TRUE MEANING," likewife, of all the acts recited in the preamble: fo that, if A JUDGE should presume to remand into confinement any "man, of what estate or condition soever be be," that has been "TAKEN, OF IMPRISONED, &c. " WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW,") " that then" (fays the act) " fuch person, so offending, shall for seit to the party grieved his TREBLE DAMAGES, to be reco-" wered by fuch means and in fuch manner as is formerly in " this act limited and appointed for the like penalty to be " fued for and recovered," &c.

In the preamble of the Petition of Rights, (3 Cha. I.) the fame noble declarations of British liberty, drawn from the ancient statutes against "taking and "imprisoning mentally subversive of the most essential and indispensable principles of our happy legal imprisoning a man without due process of the law," are expressly recited and confirmed, (see 3d and 4th §.) as well as in the last-mentioned act. And the judges are likewise expressly directed, BY BOTH ACTS, to grant " WRITS OF HABEAS CORPUS," for immediate relief from all fuch iliegal imprisonments; whether committed by authority of the king or of the privycouncil: fo that there are two babeas corpus acts, previous to, and of equal authority with, that which commonly engrosses the title of the Habeas Corpus Ad, though it is, in reality, only a supplement to the two former acts, being clearly intended to supply all that could be thought infusicient for the security of the fubject's liberty in the former acts above recited: being intitled, -" An Act for the BETTER SECURING the Liberty of the Subject, Ge." See stat. 31 Cha. II. c. ii. And therefore whatever may feem doubtful, or not fufficiently expletive therein, must necessarily be construed in favour of liberty, according to the established rules and maxims of the common law. II

[61]

Ιf

[&]quot;Impius et crudelis judicandus oft qui LIBERTATI non favet." Co. Lit. 29, from Fortescu. "Impious and cruel is that man to be efteemed who does not favour liberty."—" Angliæ jura in omni "caju LIBERTATI dant savouren." (See Prin. Leg. et Æquit. p. 5, from Fortescu.) "The lavos of England Favour liberty in Every "CASE." And the learned chancellor Fortescu himself expresses this noble principle still more fully in c. xivii. p. 109, de laud. Leg. Ang.—"Humana natura in LIBERTATIS causa Favorem semper, "Mass quam in allis causis, deprecetur," &c. "In the "cause of LIBERTY human nature Always implares Favour more "than in any other cause."

Iegal establishment; and, at the same time, so impious a violation of that natural

If a judge, therefore, should remand a man into any fuch illegal imprisonment, he immediately (by the inevitable construction of these laws () becomes a party in the injury: for the illegality of remanding a man, bought up by HABEAS CORPUS, where "no cause is " certified," (that is, no legal cause,) is severely condemned in the 5th fect. of the Bill of Rights: and the subsequent act, of 16 Cha. I. c. x. gives a penalty of treble damages, as I have already remarked. And, what is worfe, if any judge should be guilty of such injustice, in the case of a pressed man, he would be liable to still greater penalties, because the case of pressing necessarily includes, not only the circumstances of " taking and imprisoning a man avithout due process of the " law," but also the intention of carrying him a prifoner " cut of the realm;" whereby the judges (to offending) become liable to all the penalties of the last supplemental baleus corpus act; which is treble costs, and sool. damages at the haft; a disability to bear any office of trust or profit under the crown; besides all the other

This truth is also fatther testified by the arguments and authorities collected in Bushel's case, reported by Ld C. J. Vaughan, p. 156:—viz. "IVhen a man is brought by HABEAS CORPUS to the court, and, upon return of it, it appears to the court that be was against law IM-FRISONED and DETAINED, though there be no cause of privilege for him in this court, he shall never be by the ast of the court REMANDED to his unlawful imprisonment, for them the COURT should do an action of INJUSTICE, in imprisoning him, DE NOVO, AGAINST LAW; whereas the the great charter is, Qued nullus liber homo IMPRISONETUR, NISI PER LEGEM TERR #," &c.

tural equality, with respect to law, justice, and personal protection, which the Almighty other penalties of a primurire, which the king cannot pardon!

The plea of necessity for the service will not excuse them; because that very plea in the very same case, the necessity for the sea service, viz. for "the good and "safety of the kingdom in general, Sc. and the whole king-"dom in danger" (and a stronger or more urgent necessity cannot be expressed); yet it was deemed insufficient to justify the opinion of all the judges in favour of extorting ship-money (16 Cha. 1. c. 14); and much more ininsticient will it be to excuse the violent and forcible "taking and imprisoring" of ship-men, because the tersons of men are infinitely more facred in law than their pecuniary property: for it is an unquestionable maxim, that "Law regards the person above his pessession."
"Life and liberiy most," &c. (Prin. Leg. et Æq.

T "- the person, or persons, who shall knowingly frame, contrive, " write, feal, or counter-fign, ANY WARRANT" or writing " for fuch " commitment, detainer," imprisonment, " or TRANSPORTATION; or " shali so commit, detain, imprison, or TRANSPORT, any person, or " persons, contrary to this act; or be ANY WAYS ADVISING, AID-" ING, OR ASSISTING, THEREIN"; (which must inevitably include the act of REMANDING;) "being lawfully convicted thereof, fall" (befides the penalties of treble cofts and f. 500 damages, mentioned in the former part of the section) " be disabled from thenceforth to bear " any office of trust or profit within the faid realm of England, &c. and " spail incur and sustain the pains, penalties, &c. in and by the statute of provision and premunire, &c .- and be INCAPABLE OF ANY " PARDON FROM THE KING, bis heirs, &c."-Stat, 31 Car. II. §. xii. And, by the x. §. a forfest of 500% is awarded against any judge for refufing the writ of HABEAS CORPUS, even though demanded in time of vacation.

[64]

Almighty himself has commanded to be maintained " without respect of persons;" that

Æq. p. 56.) And, as the inheritance of the law, by an established maxim already quoted, is faid to defeend " unicuique nostrum,"-" to EVERY ONE of us," (without exception,) the SEAMEN are furely as much entitled to claim their inheritance and RIGHT to the whole benefit of the law as any other part of the community; for they cannot be excluded, because another excellent maxim fays, " Turpis oft PARS que non " convent cum fuo TOTO." (Plowden, 161.) " Shame-" ful is that part" (of a community) " which is not " furted with its auhole" (body). So that, if SEAMEN are denied the benefit and protection of the laws, on the part of government, fuch a denial unavoidably tends to flacken and untie the bands of allegiance on the part of the feamen, who are thereby compelled to undertake their own protection and defence whenever the law is denied them; for the ties of allegiance must necessarily be reciprocal, according to the first principles of focial government, because the protection of natural right is the first foundation of English law, which no act of parliament has any authority to fubwert; and the useful order of feamen, in particular, cannot be denied the protestion of the law, without the most stimulalating provocation to refiftance in their own defence: because it is agreeable to a fundamental maxim of the British constitution of state, that " Nothing is more in-" tolerable in law, than that any one part of the communiet ty should be esteemed under a different law from the 66 reft, 23 that even an act of parliament cannot make it lawful; for "God is no respecter " of persons." (Acts x. 34) " He ac-" cepteth not the persons of princes, nor re-" gardeth the rich MORE THAN POOR; " for they are all the work of bis bands." (Job. xxxiv. 19.) "He hath made the small " and the great, AND CARETH FOR ALL " ALIKE." (Wisdom, vi. 7.) And, with respect to equal justice, God's direction to judges is part of the moral law, which is fill binding,-" they shall judge the peo-" ple with just judgement. " shalt not wrest judgement. Thou shalt " NOT RESPECT PERSONS; neither take reft," for there can be no such thing as common right" wherever this is the case. —— Thus I have endeavoured to express the right of seamen in as plain and intelligible terms as I could; that every common seaman of common sense may be able to discern the inestimable value of his best inheritance, THE LAW; and I shall always esteem it my duty to God to maintain and defend their rights to the utmost of my power.

^{* &}quot;Nibil in lege intolerabilius oft, candom rem diverso jure censeri :" and another maxim says,—" Turp is oft pars quæ non convenit cum say toto,"

" a gift,"* &c. (Deut. xvi. 18.) The fashionable fneer, therefore, of some modern lawyers, against the just doctrine concerning " the equality of mankind," savours of a lamentable ignorance in the first principles of their profession, relating to " common right" or justice!

All

* According to the common law of England also, BRIBERY, or the taking of gifts, is esteemed a most keinous crime in JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS; yet it is much more heinous (because more dangerous) in LEGISLA-TION: infomuch that a just suspicion of undue influence (by private pensions, places held during pleasure, &c.) is sufficient also to vitiate and annul the proceedings even of a LEGISLATURE! and therefore, when wicked and corrupt men, in the administration of any government, presume to varnish over their illegal proceedings with the specious pretence of " windi-" cating and establishing legislative authority," and yet, at the same time, (by sapping its honour and dignity with the baneful influence of pensions, and such other BRIBERY,) do notoriously practice the most effectual means to undermine and destroy it !- fuch men, I fay, must be deemed traitors and unpardonable hypocrites, whom NATIONAL JUSTICE will mark for the future vengeance of a much injured, and, hitherto, "DELUDED PEO-" PLE," if they do not repent, before the measure of their iniquity be fulfilled, and heartily adopt some prudent plan of political reformation!

All that I have faid against the supposed act for suspending the law, would be equally applicable to an act of parliament for impressing either seamen, or any other rank or denomination of British subjects: because it would be a real suspension (with respect to one part of the community) of all the most valuable acts of parliament which are deemed the pillars of the constitution, though the learned judge Foster has profituted his pen by afferting that it is " not inconfistent with any statute." That learned man, furely, did not confider that the practice of impressing (as now carried on) necessarily includes the circumstances of "taking" and "im-" prisoning" without " due process of the " law;" which is expressly prohibited not only by one statute, but by many statutes. The very first statute in our book ordains, that " No freeman shall be TA-" KEN or IMPRISONED, &c. but by the 1 2 " lawful " lawful judgement of his peers, or by the " LAW OF THE LAND:" which, in another recital, by parliamentary authority, is explained to fignify " process of the " law."—And another venerable statute (which, like Magna Charta, has been so frequently confirmed by other acts of parliament, in different periods, that no single parliament can have sufficient authority to repeal it) expressly ordains, that " No man, of what estate or condition that " be be," (so that there can be no exception of SEAMEN,) " Shall be put out of " land or tenements, nor TAKEN, nor " IMPRISONED, nor difinherited," (and the protection of THE LAW is already fhewn to be our most valuable inheritance,) " nor put to death, without being brought " to answer by Due Process of LAW." Stat. 28 Ed. III. c. 3. This excellent statute, and the clause above quoted from the Great-Charter, are both expressly recited and confirmed in the Bill of Rights, (3 Cha. I. c. 1.) and also in the act for regulating the privy-council, (16 Cha. I. c. 10.)—So that judge Foster's affertion in favour of pressing, viz. that it is "not in-" consistent with any statute," is an unpardonable instance of difingenuity! For what " due process of law" can be pointed out to justify or warrant the taking, imprisoning, and disinheriting, (of his most valuable inheritance, THE LAW) an innocent failor? - An admiralty-warrant cannot be confidered as a " due process of the " law," to justify any such taking, imprisoning, &c. because it is founded on no other authority than that of " the king " and council," whose warrant, for any fuch purposes, is rendered totally illegal by authority of an act of parliament, still in force; (16 Cha. I. c. 10.) so that if a judge should presume to remand a man to confinement, that has been "taken " and imprisoned" by any such warrant, (which is illegal, and of course no "pro-" cess " ccfs of law,") he would be liable to an impeachment of high-treason to the state: for promoting an illegal power and pretension of the crown, in direct opposition to a solemn act of the whole legislature!

For the same reasons, every magiftrate who prefumes to back a press-warrant is also highly criminal, and makes himself an adviser and party, in a most notorious breach of the king's peace! because the effect of promoting an illegal warrant, to suspend (as much as in him lies) the laws of the king's peace, common right, and personal protection, from any of the king's subjects, (and this even in the king's name,) must necessarily suspend also, at the same time, the allegiance of the persons injured, for so a long time as they are in any actual danger; and they are permitted, even by the FIRST foundation dation of the English law, * " to repel " force with force, and to defend themselves " and their own property against unjust " violence." And they are not deemed guilty of murder, even if they kill the affailants, provided the killing be inevitable in their defence; and that they cannot otherwise maintain their rights. -Nay, men are not only justified in defending themselves with force and arms, but may also legally defend and rescue any other person whatever, that is attacked or oppressed by an unlawful violence, though he be totally unknown to the rescuers!— For this was literally the case of Hopkins, Hugget, and three others, (an adjudged case in B. R. 18 Car. 2.) who, in attempting to rescue a stranger from the custody

^{* &}quot;Primum fundamentum legis Angliæ est lex RATIO"NIS."—Doct. et Stud. c. 5.——" Insuper lex ratio"nis permittit plurima sieri, ut scilicet quod LICITUM
"EST vim vi repellere, et quod sas est UNICUIQUE" (seamen not excepted) "se tueri, et rem suam desendere
"contra vim injustam." Doct. et Stud. c. ii.

[72]

cuttody of some press-masters, in Smith-field, happened to kill one of them.—
"This was but man-flaughter," (says Ld. C. J. Holt, †) " for, when the liberty of " cne

+ See his Report of " Regima wer us Manugringe." published at the end of Ld C. 1. Kelyng's Reports, of which judge Holt was the editor. Some fire's has been laid on the circumstance in the above case, that " the turn or poter," which the preis-maders thewed to Hugget, &c. " wear not a inflicions securates." This is, indeed, readily allowed; and we may fafely aid, that, if the land admiral sime it had attended to affire his green-maffers, his authority in this cafe would have been as infiguificant as that of any other man; fince the baneful clause of " Now obliance large" in the indulmental's parent is declared and and told a and, even if the tree, at that time, and the hear of the pricy council had also attended in perion, with the BEST WARRANT they could make, it would fill have been " an in bestient agarences" to justify any fuch violent attacks upon the liberty of innocent febrefis! and the same judgement in line must inevitably have been given (supposing the LAW to be DULY MAIN-TAINED) as in the recited cafe : becaute the meane? Jubjecht are as much entitled to the protestion of the land as a king is to dis creers, and consequently are cracily juftified in defending it, and in relifting animetal force with force, according to the prof framearies of the Begigh love as already recited. For it is a maxim in law, that " the king are order nothing" (i. e. nothing

[73]

" one subject is invaded, it affects all the rest: it is a provocation to all people, as K " being of legal process) " except by a court legally appointed." " Rex nil potest jubere nis per curiam legitime constitutam." Now, as all pretence of legal power (in the capacity of a court of law) is taken from the king and council by express act of parliament, it would be absurd to attribute to their quarrants and orders, or the admiralty press-avarrants, (which are founded on no other authority,) the least legal authority as " a sufficient quarrant" to justify the taking and imprisoning any man whatfoever; because they are not, nor cannot be confidered as, any part of "THE DUE PROCESS OF THE LAW," which alone can jufify the taking and impriforing British subjects! And, therefore, as prefagangs (officers as well as men) are manifeltly employed in an unlawful business, acting without LAW, there is no crime in beating, or even in killing, them, if they cannot otherwife be repelled, which must necessarily be deemed a justifiable manslaughter, " se Defendendo;" because it is a maxim, that-" robere there is NO LAW there " is no TRANSGRESSION." " U'i non est LEX ibi " non est TRANSGRESSIO." And another maxim says: In vain deth that man implore the aid" (or procection) " of LAW, who firives to subvert even the LAW " itsilf."-" Frustra LEGIS auxilium implorat, qui " LEGES IPSAS fubo. riere conatur :" which must inevitably be deemed the case of press-gangs; infomuch that judge Foster himself (if he meant to act according TO LAW) must have directed the jury to find the fame verdict, in his famous reported case of Alexander Broadfoot,

[74]

" being of ill example and pernicious confe" quence."

In short, that excellent adage for all the ordinary circumstances of life, viz. "Honesty the best Policy," will be found to hold equally good in real politics, or affairs of government, even throughout the most dangerous and alarming difficulties and emergencies of state; because (if we entertain any real belief in divine Providence) examples may be produced, from the histories of all nations, to demonstrate, that the crafty refinements of mere worldly policy do frequently

Broadfoot, even if, instead of a common failor belonging to the prepingang, Broadfoot had shot the lieutenant of the gang, or even the captain himself with the admirally avarrant in his hand; because the same just edjection would still have held good against the presigang, wiz.—" that they assed without legal warrant;" for an admiralty warrant, to impress seamen, is no legal avarrant, or "precess of the law," to take or imprison any man whatsoever:—— and, therefore all the pains that have been taken, by that learned man, to difguise and confound the true legal state of the case, are frivolous, and unworthy his rank and character!

quently haften or produce the very evils they were intended to avert! An administration of government, therefore, which cannot subsist with law, justice, and common bonesity, is unsit to subsist at alt! because law is the only basis of good and lawful government; fo that no man can be efteemed truly loyal who thinks otherwise; and though several precedents for sufpending THE LAW (both in pressing and other cases) may easily be produced; yet they can afford no justification or excuse for such measures; because the iniquity of them still remains, and " Malum " quo communius eo pejus;" fo that the citing bad prefidents is a manifest aggravation of the treason! And it is a maxim,—that " PEACE IS THE LIFE OF THE COM-" MONWEALTH, LIBERTY THE " OF IT, AND THE LAWS IT'S BODY." - "VITA REIPUBLICÆ PAX, ET A-MIMUS LIBERTAS, ET CORPUS LE-"GES."—And, therefore, the hateful meafure measure of suspending the LAWS, under a pretended necessity of carrying on a cruel war against the advocates for LIBERTY, ought to be deemed an attempt to destroy the LIFE, soul, and BODY, of the republic!

-" Great is the TRUTH, and stronger

" than all things;—it liveth and conquer" eth for evermore. With her there is

" no ACCEPTING OF PERSONS, OF RE" wards; she doeth the things that are

" JUST, and refraineth from ALL UN-

" just and wicked things. - Nei" ther in her JUDGEMENT (or decree)

" is any UNRIGHTEOUSNESS; and she is

" the STRENGTH, KINGDOM, POWER,

" and MAJESTY, of all ages!"

" BLESSED BE THE GOD OF TRUTH!"

